Development levy on hold?

► Councillor says work can move ahead without one per cent tax for now

@METRONEWS.CA

A proposed one per cent economic-development levy could be off the table for this year.

Coun. Joe Swan, chairman of the city's new investment and economic prosperity committee, said officials are eyeing a plan that would focus on two key initiatives this year and put millions of dollars worth of other development projects on hold.

Committee members will consider the idea — and hear a related report from city staff — during a meeting at city hall. The new plan, Swan said, is a “prudent step-by-step approach within our financial means.”

There's enough money in existing capital budgets to move ahead with this year's key initiatives — clearing and developing at least part of the former South Street Hospital site and preparing Highway 401/402 corridor lands for growth, he said. After that, city officials will “look at what other

In other action

Also at Monday's meeting, the investment and economic prosperity committee will:

- Field a letter regarding a proposed land swap with the city to allow for new development downtown.
- Field a request for $29 million over five to 10 years to help with economic-development initiatives at the London Health Sciences' CSTAR centre.

projects are coming forward ... and identify a secure source of financing.”

Demolition and remediation of the South Street property is expected to cost about $3.2 million, a city report says. Costs associated with developing the highway corridor are expected to be discussed at Monday's meeting, Swan said. That discussion is likely to be behind closed doors because the work will involve buying private land, one of several issues municipal councils are allowed to discuss in private.

► People wave union flags and signs to show their support for locked out Electro-Motive Diesel workers during a Saturday labour rally in Victoria Park. The rally, dubbed a London Day of Action, drew thousands and included a long list of speakers, most of whom called the federal government to task for not getting involved in the labour dispute at the plant.

ANGELA MULLINS
@METRONWS.CA

It may not spur movement from Prime Minister Stephen Harper. Few, if any, are holding out hope it will spur movement from parent company Caterpillar.

But Saturday's labour rally in Victoria Park helped make at least one thing concrete for locked out Electro-Motive Diesel workers — their situation warrants a call to action.

"I think people ... can't comprehend why this is happening," Electro-Motive employee Rob White, 49, from London said Sunday.

That simple fact, he said, helped draw the thousands of people who participated in what was dubbed a London Day of Action.

Organizers estimate upwards of 15,000 people headed downtown for the event. Many left the park — where politicians and labour leaders alike called on the federal government to help in the dispute — en route to Oxford Street East locomotive plant, standing on a picket line for hours.

The rally took on the tone of a rock concert at times as a band played on stage and people in the crowd waved union flags, shouting to show support for speakers' calls to action. Participants included union members from as far away as Illinois and Montreal, workers said.

The excitement carried into Sunday morning with picketing workers talking about the need for everyone to remain united.

"Solidarity" will be key to keeping the momen-

"Its not just our fight," he said. "It's everybody's fight."

SIU probe crash of car cops say wouldn't stop

Ontario's police watchdog is investigating a crash involving a car that police say failed to pull over.

Provincial police say they tried to stop a car for a traffic violation in Southwold, southwest of London, around 9:30 p.m. Saturday.

Police allege the car drove past them on Wellington Road and officers quickly gave up on following it.

They say the car crashed near Glansworth Road in London soon afterward. The driver was taken to hospital with serious injuries. THE CANADIAN PRESS

No charge for driving through window

Police say they aren't laying charges against a woman who allegedly drove through a storefront window in Woodstock, Ont. Police say the 61-year-old driver was at fault but won't be charged since the collision didn't happen on the road. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Homes found for Storybrook animals

► Most storybook Gardens animals may move to various locations across North America

City administrators are floating a plan that would see all but domestic animals moved out of Storybook Gardens by summer.

City council's community-services committee will hear a report tonight on transferring the attraction's remaining animals — including the seals — to a zoo and wildlife sanctuaries.

"While it will be an emotional farewell to the seals at Storybook Gardens, this is a one-of-a-kind opportunity to have them live in one of the best facilities in North America," Ross Fair, the city's executive director of community services said in a statement. "The animals deserve the best care and housing possible. We are confident we have found that."

If councillors support the idea, it will be the final stage of a process that started several years ago.

City politicians first OK'd giving up the animals when they approved Storybook Gardens' 2008-2010 business plan. Since then, suitable homes have been found for more than half at sites in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick.

The only animals scheduled to remain at the attraction are those in the Old MacDonald's Farmyard exhibit. They include sheep, goats, miniature donkeys, rabbits, ducks, chickens and a dog.

The exhibits from which the animals are moved will be closed and replaced with new ones, officials said. ● ANGELA MULLINS

New locations

City administrators are proposing the following for Storybook Gardens animals:

- Zoo. The four harbour seals will be moved to the Saint Louis Zoo in Missouri, where a new $18-million US pool is being built.
- Sanctuary. Two lynx will be moved to PAWS Wildlife Sanctuary in California.
- Aspen Valley. Beavers and an otter will be moved to Aspen Valley Wildlife Sanctuary near Rousseau, N.B.
- Sandy Pines. Birds of prey will be moved to Sandy Pines Wildlife Sanctuary near Nepean, Ont.

Navy overhauled intelligence as alleged spy lurked in midst

► Former naval officer accused of leaking information

An unfolding spy drama involving a junior Canadian officer comes amid a determined effort by the Royal Canadian Navy to improve and expand its own intelligence capacity.

Over the past two years, military planners working for the head of the navy have been drawing a "road map" in order to provide decision-makers and warships at sea with better information on possible threats to domestic waters and among international shipping lanes, a series of internal documents reveal.

The strategy was widely circulated among senior echelons of the navy in 2010, according to a briefing list obtained by The Canadian Press.

It could prove to be an intelligence bonanza in the wrong hands, providing insight into how Canadians gather information.

Neither the Harper government, nor National Defence will say whether Sub-Lieut. Jeffrey Delisle had access to the strategy — or early drafts of it.

Just what a potential spy might have been after and for whom has been the subject of frenzied speculation.

Officials have refused to discuss any and all aspects of the case.

But defence and intelligence experts say the real gold for a foreign power — be it Russia or some other nation — would lay in the country's methods, code words and placement of assets, both human and electronic.

“May gold and jade come to fill your home.” China is celebrating its Spring Festival on Monday. This special day marks the start of the Chinese year 4710 and eight days of feasting and wishing peace, happiness and prosperity to each other. In China, the elderly will enjoy the much-awaited annual show on state television while their married children will cook and visit friends and relatives.

The economy and industry will grind to a halt. The trains will be chaos as millions leave the factories and big cities in the south to rush home. But it's worth all the hassle: Chinese New Year is the only time migrant workers get to see their families.

The Spring Festival celebrations are all-day affairs; the louder, the better, in order to scare away evil spirits.

In Shanghai, the malls have swapped their Christmas decorations for red lanterns, dragon statues and loud traditional music. In Beijing, firecrackers are sold at every corner and lit anytime of the day. A word of caution: Two people died last year in the capital because of fireworks.

Chinese New Year is also a food festival. Prime Minister Wen Jiabao enjoys turning up at a worker's house, with a little apron, to cook dumplings in front of the cameras. Most people enjoy cheap yet healthy food, such as sweet clementines, taro cakes, braised catfish and some delicious pudding made of rice and sugar.

► Sativex, the world's first pharmaceutical from raw marijuana, may soon be marketed as a treatment for cancer pain.

FIRST RAW CANNABIS DRUG MAY HIT SHELVES IN U.S.

A quarter-century after the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved the first prescription drugs based on the main psychoactive ingredient in marijuana, additional medicines derived from or inspired by the cannabis plant itself could soon be making their way to pharmacy shelves, according to drug companies, small biotech firms and university scientists.

A U.K. company, GW Pharma, is in advanced clinical trials for the world's first pharmaceutical developed from raw marijuana instead of synthetic equivalents — a mouth spray it hopes to market in the U.S. as a treatment for cancer pain. It hopes to see FDA approval in 2013. Sativex contains two marijuana components — delta 9-THC and cannabidiol. It has been approved in Canada, New Zealand and eight European countries for relieving muscle spasms associated with multiple sclerosis.

Currently, 16 U.S. states and the District of Columbia allow residents to use marijuana legally with doctors' recommendations. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration categorizes pot as a dangerous drug with no medical value, but the availability of Sativex may increase pressure on the federal government to revisit its position.

RIM CEOs resign

- Balsillie and Lazaridis will be replaced by RIM COO Thorsten Heins
- Pair has been blamed for RIM's struggle to keep pace with competitors

BlackBerry maker Research in Motion's co-CEOs, Jim Balsillie and Mike Lazaridis, are stepping down.

The company says the pair who founded RIM will be replaced by Thorsten Heins, a chief operating officer who joined RIM four years ago from Siemens AG. Balsillie and Lazaridis have headed Waterloo, Ont.-based RIM together for the past two decades.

The company took a big slide in 2011, dropping behind its peers in the lightning-paced smartphone market, suffering through the worst service outage in its history and losing tens of billions of dollars in market value.

And the PlayBook tablet, RIM's answer to the Apple iPad, failed to gain consumer support and the company was forced to give it deep discounts to help move the devices off store shelves.

Many investors held Balsillie and Lazaridis responsible for the company's problems and previously called for them to be replaced and also for the company to be sold or broken up.

WRITTEN WORD FINDS A NEW CLIQUE

URBAN COMPASS

TODD DEVLIN

It's been said that everyone has a novel in them. Actually producing that novel, however, is often easier said than done. Three years into hers, Elaine Cougler realized she needed some help. "There were things I wanted to know about the writing world, and I realized that I had to go farther afield to find people who knew what I needed to learn," Cougler said.

She decided to join the London Writers Society, an organization that has been helping both new and experienced writers hone their craft and learn more about the publishing industry since 2007. That was nearly two years ago, and Cougler has since finished her work of historical fiction.

"I have an agent and an editor in New York that want to see it," she said. "I'm just getting it to the point where it's the best that I can do and then I'm going to send it out."

"I find a lot of people have misconceptions about writing and the publishing industry. And it's constantly changing, so the group is a good way to find out about that stuff and also to talk about your writing problems."

PAT BROWN,
PRESIDENT,
LONDON WRITERS SOCIETY

Cougler says she has learned a great deal about the entire publishing process since joining the London Writers Society. And that's music to the ears of Pat Brown, who took over as president of the society last summer.

"I find a lot of people have misconceptions about writing and the publishing industry," Brown said. "And it's constantly changing, so the group is a good way to find out about that stuff and also to talk about your writing problems."

Aside from Brown and a few other members, the majority of attendees at meetings are unpublished writers, like Cougler, who are looking to improve in the hopes of one day landing a publisher — or taking the self-publishing route, which is becoming more and more common.

Meetings, which are open to the public and are attended by those anywhere from age 20 to 85-plus, often include creative writing exercises, guest speakers, workshops, critique groups and open-mic sessions. For Cougler, the best part may just be the company.

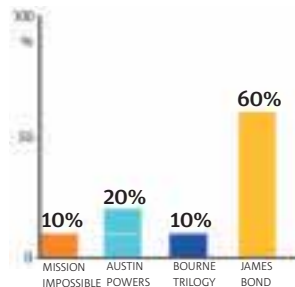

"It's really nice to be able to talk to people that actually understand what it feels like to really enjoy writing," she said. "Because a lot of your friends don't really get it."

London Writers Society meetings are held the third Thursday of every month (except August) at the Landon Library in Wortley Village (167 Wortley Rd.) from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Those who sign up to become full-time members are required to pay an annual $25 fee. "Defeat — I do not recognize the meaning of the word!" Margaret Thatcher wasn't called the Iron Lady for nothing.

And, despite the fact that she left 10 Downing Street 21 years ago, she commands fascination and fear. In fact, the Iron Lady — with Meryl Streep as a supreme Thatcher — has inspired a new Maggie-mania.

"My mother is an ex-hippie who starts crying when one mentions Thatcher, but many people in my generation feel a strong admiration for Thatcher," says Max Wind-Cowie, 26, a public opinion researcher at Demos, a London think tank. "People don't always agree with her policies,

To be sure, the Iron Lady knew what she believed in: individual liberty, free enterprise and anti-Communism.

"Even though there aren't many real Thatcherites, people who subscribe to Thatcher's ideology, left, many people look back at her with nostalgia", notes Richard Vinet, Professor of Modern European History at King's College, London, and author of Thatcher's Britain.

"Especially now, with the EU in crisis, people remember her for her opposition to the EU."

Indeed, today's Britain seems much closer to Thatcher's beliefs than the Britain she ruled. Last year 54 per cent of Britons thought social benefits (to low-income households) were too high, compared to 35 per cent in 1983. "Sympathy for people at the bottom of the heap has evaporated," notes Wind-Cowie.

Thatcher's actions

- 1 Kept Britain out of the single European currency.
- 2 Marginalized Britain's powerful trade unions. The move caused high unemployment, and anger, in Britain's North.
- 3 Privatized gas, electricity, telephony, British Airways and British Rail.
- 4 Cut welfare benefits.
- 5 Stood up to the Soviet Union, supported by Ronald Reagan.
- 6 Won the Falklands War against Argentina.

A day in the life of Maggie

The champion of individual responsibility can't remember anything, let alone take care of herself.

Margaret Thatcher suffers from dementia. "Though there's currently a lot of research into its causes, dementia is still an illness without a cure," explains Dr. Claudia Cooper, lecturer in old-age psychiatry at University College, London.

"Patients often get lost or forget to eat, and they can also get depression or physical health problems."

The Iron Lady, ruler of the box office

A political movie, how dull. But Meryl Streep as Maggie Thatcher is a completely different matter.

During its first weekend in British cinemas, The Iron Lady captured the top box office spot, taking over $5 million.

This figure is nearly three times the box office achieved by The Queen when it opened in 2006.

Twentieth Century Fox, the film's distributor, reported that The Iron Lady even did well in Britain's North, where Thatcher remains disliked, even loathed. Meryl Streep won a Golden Globe for the role.

Gimme 5, up high

► With Red Tails opening this past weekend, here's a look at five great movies about airplanes

Red Tails, in theatres now, is about the first black fighter pilots in the United States: the Tuskegee Airmen who finally saw battle in the skies over Europe during the Second World War.

It's a story that's very much worth telling. As well, it presents a good opportunity to take a look at five movies about airplanes that really do soar.

CHRISTY LEMIRE/
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Airplane! (1980)

Not just one of the best airplane movies ever, not just one of the best comedies ever.

This is one of my absolute favourite movies ever, regardless of genre. When the LA Film Critics Association asked its members to fill out a questionnaire and choose one movie everyone should see, I didn't pick Citizen Kane. I picked this. It's a dead-on spoof of all those 1970s Airport disaster movies, the one to which all subsequent parodies have aspired. The tone is so perfect, the cast is so great, and the script is so jammed with classic lines.

Wings (1927)

This was the first film to win the Academy Award for best picture and the only silent film ever to achieve that honour.

A restored print of Wings recently was shown to a packed house at the Motion Picture Academy with live organ accompaniment, and it was a huge treat to see it in that setting. This tale of First World War fighter pilots, starring Charles Rogers, Richard Arlen and an insanely adorable Clara Bow, was at the time the most expensive movie Paramount had ever made. The budget was set at $1.2 million but it ballooned to $2.1 million.

United 93 (2006)

Paul Greengrass' reenactment of the hijacking of United Airlines Flight 93 on Sept. 11, 2001, which crashed into a Pennsylvania field after passengers foiled the terrorist plot, sounded like a daunting prospect. We know all too well how it's going to end long before it begins, and his documentary-style realism would surely add to the agony. But it is that very realism and Greengrass' respectful attention to detail that make it impossible not to feel engrossed with every fibre in your being. This film is definitely an edge-of-your-seat thriller.

Top Gun (1986)

This is the 1980s in film form: all the bombast and patriotism, all the big hair and shoulder pads, with Tom Cruise at the height of his powers playing a fighter pilot named — in all seriousness — Maverick. Cruise was still young and sexy back then, and Top Gun wasn't exactly subtle in celebrating his cocky, brash screen persona. Or as his superior puts it in scolding him: "Son, your ego is writing checks your body can't cash." Cruise, Anthony Edwards and Val Kilmer play students at an elite flying academy.

North by Northwest (1959)

This is a cheat, I will acknowledge that. But the crop-duster scene is so iconic that when I think of movies about airplanes, I think of this. It isn't just one of the most famous scenes in an Alfred Hitchcock film, it's one of the most famous scenes in film history, period. Cary Grant, a victim of mistaken identity who finds himself wrongly accused of murder, goes on the run. In his hunt for clues to the mystery, he winds up on a rural highway in the middle of nowhere, where he's repeatedly buzzed by an armed crop-dusting plane.

An electric journey

► Neil Young picks up the pace with new concert film, played recently at the Slamdance Film Festival

VICTORIA WILL/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

► Neil Young

Partnership

► Demme and Young seem to be on a never-ending film journey. The new movie marks the fourth film collaboration between Young and Demme, the Academy Award-winning director of The Silence of the Lambs.

Neil Young recalls how his first concert film with director Jonathan Demme was a lush, stately tribute to country music.

He says their latest, Neil Young Journeys, is more like an electric bolt, with a "grinding, blinding beauty to it."

Their 2006 film Neil Young: Heart of Gold premiered at the Sundance Film Festival and was a reflective, comforting chronicle of two shows Young performed at Nashville's Ryman Auditorium alongside such longtime musical comrades as Emmylou Harris, Ben Keith and Spooner Oldham.

Journeys is a raw, thunderous counterpart, filmed by Demme at Toronto's Massey Hall during the closing shows of Young's solo tour last year. Solo often implies intimate and acoustic, but Young wails away on electric guitar, harmonica, piano and organ throughout the show.

The new film played Saturday at the Slamdance

Film Festival, a rival showcase to Sundance. Demme says it was a fitting place because both Slamdance and the film share something of a "bad-boy" attitude.

"Journeys is so different from Heart of Gold. It's like the other side of the universe," Young, 66, said in an interview alongside Demme. "Heart of Gold was a massive production with great caretaking to present this whole image of this forgotten style of presenting music, in this great old chapel of country music. ...

"This film we just made is so opposite of that. It's just one person. The sound is completely different and the attitude of it is different. The look is different. ... The sounds are kind of enveloping. You get to move way inside, whereas, Heart of Gold, you're way back, going, 'Oh, it's beautiful seeing it from the back, seeing all these beautiful people, these great musicians.' And this one here, you're like inside my instrument, inside the distortion of the guitar. There's nothing in the way."

Plenty of swag to go around

Where there are celebrities, there is swag, and the Sundance Film Festival is no exception. Nearly a dozen gift suites opened their doors Friday afternoon along Park City, Utah's Main Street.

Kate Bosworth, Andy Samberg, Emma Roberts and Rashida Jones are among the famous folks who stopped by the VEVO PowerStation SOREL Suite, where they could indulge in moisturizing facials and lip treatments from Fresh cosmetics and outfit their feet in snow-ready footwear.

The Bertolli Meal Soup Chalet served up bowls of hot soup and handed out sunglasses and Lumene skincare products to visitors.

Rashida shares spotlight

Rashida Jones was almost upstaged by her famous father, Quincy Jones, at the Sundance premiere of her film, Celeste and Jesse Forever, but the actress and screenwriter didn't mind.

"He's what he is and he will always be and has always been, way before I was here," Jones said Saturday. "I feel lucky to hang out with him. And we're different, too. People like us for different reasons."

She added that her dad loved the film, which explores the nature of relationships, marriage and its meaning in society.

Jones' first screenwriting effort (with co-writer Will McCormack) emerged from "pain, lots of pain."

"We're both very deeply feeling people, and we love to talk about relationships and love and feelings," she said.

Jones stars in the film alongside Andy Samberg, Emma Roberts and Elijah Wood.

► The Project Runway All Stars prove reality TV isn't always about being horrible to your fellow contestants
► But the claws may still come out this season ► Designers have only six hours to complete their next challenge

THE WORD

DOROTHY ROBINSON
SCENE@METRONews.CA

Aside from occasional dust-ups at the Neiman Marcus accessory wall, Project Runway is one reality show that isn't known for its backbiting.

At a New York screening of the spin-off Project Runway All Stars contestants — including the dashing Austin Scarlett in beads and a bow tie — broke from the usual red carpet decorum to greet each other with squeals and hugs.

"I keep in touch with a lot of them," said Kara Janx.

"I've formed some really solid relationships."

So how do these "all stars" — favourite designers from the first eight seasons of Project Runway who are competing once again in a new series of fashion challenges — make it work the second time around?

"You need to admire your fellow designers and get inspired by each other," said Kenley Collins, wearing her trademark red lipstick. "Make your life a little easier and just get along!"

"She's such a diva," joked Michael Costello, cutting in to throw an arm around Collins.

Meanwhile, Janx cited "mutual respect, mutual understanding" as the key.

"I don't feel like you have to step on toes to get ahead," she said. "You're just so curious to see what other designers will bring to the table."

It's not just contestants who noticed the camaraderie on set.

"Fashion is a community," said designer Isaac Mizrahi, one of the show's judges. But that all might change in an upcoming episode, when the designers are given only six hours to complete a challenge.

Executive producer Rob Bagshaw says those kinds of tasks were created to pit contestants "against the challenge instead of each other."

We'll see if the needles come out. WITH ADDITIONAL REPORTING FROM REBECCA FINKEL

On last week's Modern Family, toddler Lily dropped an F-bomb, to the utter horror of her parents.

The character is two-and-a-half-years old. The episode's title? Little Bo Bleep. This was the first time a scripted family TV show has had a child utter the profanity that rhymes with puck. (Don't worry, it wasn't audible to the viewer.)

As the owner of a horrible potty mouth, I could not relate to this more.

The fact is, actually, that I have dropped my cussing dramatically since the birth of my first child. And yet ... it was just a couple of years ago that my parents were watching my children when my then two-and-a-half-year old said "s—."

The worst thing? She used it correctly. Like, she broke something and dropped the S-bomb. My mother is a public school teacher who has literally never cussed. My dad is a pastor. When my mom politely told me the news, I just immediately responded by apologizing. There was no use pretending that she had picked it up from anyone but me. Everyone knows I have problems cussing.

Still, it was an important moment that led to further efforts to stop my sailor-level vocabulary. But apparently, it's not enough.

During last week's football game, I think I lost years off my life as I cheered. Every time something bad happened, I modified cuss words. Or, well, I cussed in foreign languages. My husband told me to watch it around the kids. I hate it when he's right.

► The proud parents of the f-bomb dropping toddler.

► On a recent episode of Modern Family, a toddler uses a bad word ► Our mommyish.com writer wonders, do you watch what curse words you say around your kids?

Another friend told me about how her kids were playing with friends in the neighborhood while parents sat outside and chatted. The kids were on bikes and one kid cut another kid off at the end of the cul-de-sac. "Get out of the way, A—hole" one little boy exclaimed, not even particularly upset.

The father of that child, blushing, told the boy to watch his language and then said something about how he'd have to talk to him later. But everyone laughed nervously because they knew the kid had picked it up from his parents.

And this is the shame of the child's potty mouth.

No Cussing Club

Even before the episode aired last week, an anti-profanity crusader asked ABC to pull the episode. McKay Hatch, 18, founded the No Cussing Club in 2007. He asked his club's members, whom he said number 35,000 in the U.S. and about three dozen other countries, to complain to ABC.

Protestors' take

"Our main goal is to stop this from happening," said Hatch. "If we don't, at least ABC knows that people all over the world don't want to have a two-year-old saying the 'F-bomb' on TV. We hope they know better."

The network's take

"We thought it was a very natural story, since as parents, we've all been through this. We are not a sexually charged show. It has a very warm tone so people accept it more. I'm sure we'll have some detractors," said Steven Levitan, creator and executive producer of the sitcom with Christopher Lloyd.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's almost always a complete reflection of our lack of control as parents, our inability to speak kindly to our neighbors and fellow citizens or, worse, the members of our own family.

We like to pretend, particularly among our peers, that we're great examples to our kids. When our children reveal that we're not, it's embarrassing. But it's also chastening and a great reminder of why children are such a blessing. They frequently help us become better people.

Florida scientists have discovered that starting around six months, babies begin shifting from the intent eye gaze of early infancy to studying mouths when people talk.

"The baby, in order to imitate you, has to figure out how to shape their lips to make that particular sound they're hearing," explains developmental psychologist David Lewkowicz of Florida Atlantic University, who led the study.

Helping parents avoid the 'pitfalls'

► Actor Jay Baruchel aids in launch of mother's guidebook for parents of actors

Film star Jay Baruchel says he couldn't have made it without his mother's help during an 18-year acting career that has seen him work with stars including Clint Eastwood, Hilary Swank, Morgan Freeman and Robert Downey Jr.

The star of Tropic Thunder and How to Train Your Dragon was at a Montreal theatre with his younger sister Taylor to launch the latest edition of his mother Robyne Baruchel's The Stage Parent Survival Guide, first put out by actors' union ACTRA in 2002.

The guide spells out ACTRA rules for parents and guardians of school-aged kids who want to work in Canadian film and TV.

Robyne Baruchel says it's crucial for parents to learn the ropes of the industry so they can ensure their kids are protected.

"When I started, I knew nothing," she said. "I didn't know where to go, I didn't know what to do and I always thought if I had someone to go to or some sort of resource that I could go to I would have probably avoided some of the pitfalls that are part and parcel of raising kids in that industry."

She's aware of the stereotypes of stage parents, often portrayed in tell-all Hollywood memoirs as shrieking, demanding lunatics out to make a buck off their kids.

But Jay Baruchel says his mother is light years from that and she says she's not alone.

"The ones you hear about are the ones who make bad moves and bad decisions," Robyne Baruchel said.

Cleaner, greener vacuum

► Lower your energy consumption with vacuums that are more efficient ► Make a difference

BEN KNIGHT
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

The standard household vacuum cleaner: Very clean, but is it green?

Vacuums capture and dispose of far more dust than brooms, but they also consume power, produce noise, and most models leave behind an endless series of dust-filled bags that need to be thrown out.

Is there a way to do this better?

"It's a product category no one really has been thinking about before as something that needs an environmental improvement," says Cecilia Nord, vice president of sustainability for Electrolux Small Appliances.

"As it turns out, you can actually achieve improvement by focusing on energy consumption, and also the materials in the product. It's not insignificant."

Her company produces greener sister versions of its entire vacuum cleaner product line. They may not yet be as widely available, but some pretty efficient, powerful machines are being produced.

"Depending on the model, we range from 33-50 per cent lower energy consumption," Nord says. "The fantastic thing is, we make this big saving in energy consumption, and only lose one percentage point in actual cleaning performance."

► There are options for greener vacuums.

Electrolux is not alone.

Rainbow, Sanitaire, Filter Queen, Miele and Dyson highlight a long — and ever-growing — list of manufacturers building more environmentally friendly machines.

"Historically, the consumer has been led to believe that if you have a high-wattage vacuum, it's a powerful cleaner," says Nord. "But that has nothing to do with it. It's how well it's designed that provides the cleaning performance."

Noise remains an issue, although more-efficient vacuum cleaners tend to also be slightly quieter.

And though bagless vacuums certainly exist, even vacuum bags are gradually being greened.

"We're finding renewable resources that can be transferred into materials that do the same job as non-renewable ones," she says. "We've actually started marketing a vacuum cleaner dust bag that is made out of corn starch."

There's even a designer line of cleaners — Vac from the Sea — made from plastic pollution harvested from the world's oceans.

"When we started working with recycled plastics, we realized how hard it was for us, as a manufacturer, to come by plastics of a good enough quality. We found local green organizations that are already working with this. We helped them collect plastic, and we use it to make special vacuum cleaners."

BREWING UP SOLUTIONS

Are reusable coffee filters made with metallic mesh more eco-friendly than recycled paper filters? Joel of Ottawa

QUEEN OF GREEN

LINDSAY COULTER
GREEN@METRONEWS.CA

Yes. Allow the second R of the three Rs to prevail: Reuse!

Reusable filters are even better than paper products made from 100 hundred per cent post-consumer waste (PCW) and processed chlorine-free (PCF), especially if the metal filter is recyclable. It takes effort — energy, resources, etc. — to make all paper products. Many filters on the market are also chlorine-bleached. Chlorine is toxic to produce and poisonous to fish.

If you do use good recycled paper filters, you can compost the grounds and the filter. Coffee grounds are excellent for the garden because they contain nitrogen. Sure it's snowy in most cities across Canada now, so mix the grounds into your indoor plant pots. Come spring, you can sprinkle the grounds around outdoor plants to create a slug and snail barrier (grounds are abrasive and acidic) or mix them right into the soil to release nutrients. But hold the bus. What kind of coffee are you brewing?

Coffee is the second-most-traded commodity in the world, after oil. And millions of acres of land have been cleared worldwide to grow coffee, effectively evicting all the forest inhabitants, including migrant boreal songbirds. Most coffee is produced as a monocul-ture crop, in direct sunlight. These plantations also require chemical fertilizers and pesticides.

Make the switch to coffee that has been triple certified: organic, fair trade, and shade grown; this will ensure that it is also bird-friendly.

Bird-friendly plantations not only protect some of the last remaining refuge areas for hundreds of species of birds, they also allow farmers to grow other crops as a hedge against weather hardships, pests and diseases.

Coffee plants grown under the rainforest canopy use organic leaf litter as fertilizer. Insects are controlled by natural predators such as bats and birds.

On top of that, the coffee farmer won't have to bathe in toxic pesticides to get you a morning caffeine pick-me-up.

Breaking through the boy block

► Teacher urges retooled approach to raising boys in new book ► Points concerned finger at computer-crazed world

As a longtime teacher and father of four, Michael Reist has had a front-row view of the ever-changing cultural landscape and its impact on youngsters.

And with the omnipresence of the Internet, tech gadgets and video games, he believes the task of educating and parenting kids needs to adapt with the evolving times.

In his new book, Raising Boys in a New Kind of World (Dundurn), Reist is encouraging a retooled approach in both practice and thinking when it comes to rearing boys in a media-saturated culture.

Reist has spoken extensively to parent groups and education conferences across Canada, with the main workshops centred around gender differences in learning and raising kids in a new world.

While girls have surged academically in recent years, Reist said statistics show boys aren't faring as well, and that higher percentages of girls are enrolling in universities.

Reist said cyberspace has had a huge influence. Part of the reason boys are

► "I would just like the institutions to be more open to male energy and the female brain to be aware of the differences," says Michael Reist.

falling behind in school is the amount of time dedicated to screens, which offer a feast of visuals and movement through space that are alluring to the male brain, he noted.

He understands parents' concerns with respect to too much screen time and recognizes the need for setting boundaries to limit usage; but Reist said there's nothing wrong with cyberspace or video games.

In the book, he outlines reasons why video games are good, such as allowing kids to relieve stress and offering an outlet for aggression. And while some see gaming as an isolating experience, he writes there is also a social aspect, as males tend to bond shoulder-to-shoulder through a shared activity.

"We're getting these boys who are spatial geniuses, they come into class and they're able to conquer level 500 of World of Warcraft or Call of Duty," said Reist. "But they come into my class where the job is to read a 300-page novel and to write a 1,500-word essay, and that's a bigger leap today than it was 20 years ago."

"The culture has become more and more visual, and the culture has become more and more electronic."

Reist said one of his book's main messages is not condemning the new world, but rather empathy for today's kids who have to contend with turning off cellphones, video games, TVs and computers before settling into an assigned task.

Plan of action

Ways to wake them up

- Reist writes that boys have a love and need for movement and prefer actions over words.
- He has observed in teaching that they tend to progress more slowly through the stages of language processing.

- He writes that much like a computer going into sleep mode, the male brain can act in a similar way when it's not stimulated.
- Cueing students visually through eye contact, verbally or through touch like a tap on the shoulder — or even just standing nearby — can help boys who may be zoning out

A STATEMENT RELEASED BY JOE PATERNO'S FAMILY AFTER

THE FORMER PENN STATE FOOTBALL COACH DIED AT MOUNT NITTANY MEDICAL CENTER IN STATE COLLEGE, PA., ON SUNDAY MORNING.

THE 85-YEAR-OLD'S DEATH CAME 65 DAYS AFTER HIS SON SCOTT SAID HIS FATHER HAD BEEN DIAGNOSED WITH LUNG CANCER. PATERNO COACHED FOR 46 YEARS BEFORE BEING FIRED IN NOVEMBER AFTER BEING ENGULFED IN A CHILD SEX-ABUSE SCANDAL WHEN A FORMER TRUSTED ASSISTANT, JERRY SANDUSKY, WAS ACCUSED OF MOLESTING 10 BOYS OVER A 15-YEAR SPAN, SOMETIMES IN THE PENN STATE FOOTBALL BUILDING.

Close call for Patriots

Tom Brady got all the help he needed to get the New England Patriots into the Super Bowl.

Thank you, Billy Cundiff. The Baltimore Ravens kicker shanked a 32-yard field goal with 11 seconds left and the Patriots escaped with a 23-20 victory in the AFC championship game on Sunday.

Usually, vintage Brady doesn't need much assistance in championship settings, but the Patriots'

23	20
PATRIOTS	RAVENS

much-maligned defence came through, and Brady's one-yard touchdown dive with 11:29 left proved to be the winning points.

"Well, I sucked pretty bad today, but our defence saved us," Brady said after throwing for 239 yards, with two interceptions and, for the first time in 36 games, no TD passes. "I'm going to try to go out and do a better job in a couple of weeks, but I'm proud of this team, my teammates."

Brady waited out the final tense minutes on the sideline, and then celebrated with the rest of his team when Cundiff's attempt went wide left. The Ravens looked on in horror.

Next up as the Patriots (15-3) chase their fourth Super Bowl trophy in Brady's and coach Bill Belichick's tenure in New England is the winner of Sunday's NFC championship game between the Giants and 49ers. The Super Bowl is Feb. 5 in Indianapolis.

In their last trip to the big game, the Patriots had an 18-0 record when they were stunned by the Giants four years ago. They won the NFL championship for the 2001, 2003 and 2004 seasons. This time, they head to the Super Bowl with a 10-game winning streak.

"We're going to try to go out and kick some butt in a couple of weeks," said Brady, whose fifth trip to the Super Bowl will equal John Elway's achievement with Denver.

Today's horoscope

♈ Aries March 21-April 20

The more you focus on a problem the more of a problem it will be- come, so pull your mind away from it and concentrate on something positive.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21

You should be aiming in some way to improve yourself today.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21

Try taking a more laid-back ap- proach to your problems. Try look- ing at the bright side instead of the dark.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22

Someone with whom you have dealings of a business nature may try to cheat you today.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23

You might as well give up trying to have your way and let partners and colleagues call the shots.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22

If others don't approve of your methods that's too bad: more than likely it will encourage you to use them even more (you can be per- verse like that at times).

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

This is potentially one of the best days (and weeks) of the year for you.
